

When You Call or Text the Maine Crisis Hotline

1-888-568-1112

.....

You will be connected to a trained crisis worker who will:

1. Ask about the nature of your need.
2. Ask if you're feeling safe. Safety is the primary concern and how this question is answered will determine the rest of the conversation.
3. Keep what you have shared confidential unless your safety is in question.
4. Help you figure out what supports you might have (adults who will listen and support you) and help you identify options.
5. Listen and care about what's happening to you.
6. Work with you to determine the help needed to keep you safe and to resolve the crisis. This can include arranging a face to face meeting to assess your needs.

You do not have to be suicidal to call or text the Maine Crisis Hotline - getting help before you reach the point of feeling suicidal is a very positive thing to do. Remember, the information you share with the crisis worker will remain confidential unless your safety is in question.

If you are concerned about someone else, call or text the Maine Crisis Hotline to seek information or assistance in getting someone the appropriate level of help. Tell them why you are concerned and ask what help they can offer.
